The Ministry of Navigation directive of 3 November 1951 created the Deep-Sea Fishing Institute to carry on scientific research to supplement the needs of the national economy. The institute is dedicated to study and research on the improvement and development of deep-sea fishing, and will be located in Gdynia.

The specific duties of the institute are to:

1. Maintain a library, collect technical and scientific documents, prepare technical material for publication, train cadres in specialized studies, give advice when required, and cooperate with various allied institutes and organizations.
2. Initiate a research program in the fields of ichthyology, biology, oceanography, technology, processing, fishing economy, and fishing equipment.
3. Study the extent of the fishing banks, especially those in the Baltic Sea.
4. Make test fishing runs to develop new and improved fishing techniques.
5. Study the improvement of fishing banks and the possibilities of exploiting new banks.
6. Maintain experimental stations for replenishing fish.
7. Maintain an experimental and training aquarium and museum.

The organization of the Institute is divided into two parts: the Research Department follows the outline delineated above; the Service Department helps the Research Department by dealing with matters of personnel, the budget, and economy.
